To start, I chose the MobilePre preamp because it was the only one, I had access to- along with my midi keyboard. Some problems I encountered were getting my timing down, I usually use a click track to stay on beat when practicing lyrics- this along with making sure my rhythm is right when recording instruments. I also had an issue with my Preamp when I first started working. I didn't realize it but my headphone jack was not plugged in correctly, so I had more sound going to one side of the headphones than the other. Initially I thought I messed up my panning, but it turned out to just be headphones. Something I would do next time is start a little earlier, I feel like I rushed this process a little bit when it came to the mix but overall, I think it turned out okay. Another thing would be to use a different preamp with more setting on it- I didnt get to experiment as much as I wanted to with this track.
